Nobility and Gentry of Great BRITAIN

That are desirous to speak French for their pleasure, and ornament;

AS ALSO

To all Marchant Adventurers as well English, as the worthy Company of Dutch here resident, or others to whom the said Language is necessary for commerce and Forren correspondence.

THer is no quality so incident to all earthly things as corruption and change:
Nor is it to be wondred at, considering that the Elements themselves which are the principles and primitive Ingredients wherof they be compounded, are naturally so qualified: It were as easie a thing for the beholders eye to fix a firm shape upon a running cloud, or to cut out a garment that but for seven and twenty daies together might fit the Moon, who by privilege of her neighbourhood predominates more over us than any other celestially body, as to find stability in any thing here below.

Nor is this common frailty or fatality rather incident only to the grosser sort of Elementary creatures, but Mankind upon whom it pleas'd the Almighty to imprint his owne Image, and make him Lord Paramount of this lower world, is subject to the same lubricity. Neither is his body and blood only liable therunto, but the Ideas of his mind, and interiour operations of his soul, Religion her self, with the notions of holines, and the formality of saving Faith not excepted, nay the very faculty of reason (as we find it true by late experience) is subject to the same instablenes.

But to come to our present purpose, among other privileges which are peculiar to mankind, as emanations flowing from the intellect, Language is none of the least, and languages have felt these fits of inconstancy and mutation as much as any thing else, and among others the French language. Nor can it seem strange to those who know the airie volatill humor of that Nation, that their speech should partake somewhat of the disposition of their spirit, but will rather wonder it hath receiv'd no oftner change, specially considering what outward causes did also concu-therunto; As that their Kings should make six severall voyages to conquer or conserve what was got in the Holy Land, considering how long the English kept firm footing in the heart of France;
as also the warres and weddings they had with their neighbours, which by the long sojourn of their Armies

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Armies in other Countries caus'd by the first, and the forren Courtiers that came in with their Queens arising from the second, will introduce a frequent alteration. For Languages are like Lanes or Coines, which commonly receive some change at every sit of Princes: Or as flow Rivers by insensible alluvions take in and let out the waters that feed them, yet are they said to have still the same beds; So Languages by a regardless kind of adoption of some new words, and annihilation of old, doe often vary, yet the whole bulke of the same speech keeps entire.

Touching the ancient and true genuin Language of the Gaules, some would have it to be a dialect of the Dutch, others of the Greek, others of the British or Welsh; concerning this last opinion, there be some reasons to fortifie it, that are not to be easily slighted. The first is, that the ancient Gaules used to com frequently to be instructed hereby the British Druyds, who were the Divines and Philosophers of those times, which they would not have don unles by mutuall communication they had understood one another in some vulgar language, for this was before the Latine or Greek tongue came this side the Alpes, or that any Books were written, and ther are no manner men than Tacitus and Cesar himself that record this. The second reason is, that ther want not good Geographers who hold that this Island was tied to France at first, as Sicily was to Calabria, and Denmarke to Germany, by an Isthmos or neck of land twixt Dover and Bullen, for if one do well observe the quality of the cliffs on both shores, he will judge they were but one Homogeneous peece at first, and that they were flented and shiver'd asunder by some act of violence. The third is, that divers think before the Romanes conquered the Gaules, the country was called Wallia, which they named Gallia, turning W into G, as they did elsewhere; yet the Walloon keeps his radical letter to this day. The fourth reason is, that ther be divers old Gaulic words yet remaining in the French, which are pure Welsh, both for sense and pronunciation, as Havie a haven, is the same in Welsh; Derechef again, Putaine a whore, Airain brasse money, Prou an interjection of stopping, or driving a beast, and especially when one speaks in French any old word that cannot be understood, they say Il parle Baragouin, which is to this day in plain Welsh white bread; Lastly, Pausanias sayeth that mark in the Celtic old tongue signifieth a horse, and it still signifieth so in Welsh.

But whether the British Greek or Dutch was the originall language of the Gaules, certaine it is that it was the Walloon, (I confine my selfe to Gallia Celtica,) which, when the Roman Eagle had fastened his tallons there, and planted twenty three Legions up and down the country, he did in tract of time untirly extinguish, It being the ordinary ambition of Rome, wheresoever she prevail'd, to make the lance usher in her language (and laws) as marks of conquest; which nevertheles she could not doe in Spain or this Island, because they had posts, and places of fastnes to retire unto, as Biscay, and Wales, where nature hath cast up those mountaines as propugnacles of defence, among which the very aboriginall languages of both Countries remain to this day. Now France being a passable, and a pervious plain countrie, the Romans quickly diffus'd and rooted themselves in every part thereof: and so co-planted their language, which in a short revolution of time came to be called Romand. But when the Franconians, a peeple of Germany, came afterwards to invade and possess Gallia, both peeple and speech was called French ever after. Now, as all other things have their degrees of growth, so languages have the like before they attain a perfection. We find that the Latin her selfe in the time of the Salians was but rude, afterwards under Ennius and Cato the Cenfor it was refine in the twelve tables, but in Cesar, Cicero, and Salust's daies, it came to the highest pitch of purenes and perfection, and so dainty were the Romanes of their language then, that they would not suffer any exotic word to be enfranchiz'd among them, or enter into any of their diplomatas and public instruments; The word Embleme having got into one, it was thrust out by an expresse Edict of the Senat, but Adonopoliam with much adoe had leave to stay in, yet not without a large preface or apologie. A little after, the Latin tongue for the vulgarity thereof began to degenerat and decline very much, and out of her ruines sprang up the Italian, Spanish and French. The French language being set thus upon a Latin stock, (whereof she retains to this day some pure entire words, as animal, cadaver, tribunal, non, plus, qui, os, &c.) hath receiv'd since sundry alterations, or habitudes.

Chilperic one of the first race of Kings, commanded by public edict, that these greek letters • x • v should be added to the French Alphabet, to make the language more masculin and strenuous, but after him 'twas not long observ'd.

Now,

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Now, it is no worthles observation, that languages use to comply with the humor, and much display the inclination of a peeple : the French is quick and spritfull, and so is his pronunciation ; the Spaniard is slow, and grave, so is his pronunciation ; for though the Spanish and French be branches of the Latin tree, yet the one may be cal'd Latin shortned, the other Latin drawn out in length ; as corpus, tempus, caput, &c. are monosyllables in French, as corps, temps, cap or chef, whereas the Spaniard seemes rather to add to them, as tiempo, cuerpo, cabeza. And indeed, of all other Nations, the Spaniard most of any affects long words, for he makes some thrice as long as they are in the French ; as of lèvement a rising, he makes levantamiento, of pensée a thought, he makes pensamiento, of compliment, he makes complimiento ; besides, the Spaniard doth use to pause so in his pronunciation, that the tongue seldom forerunns his wit, and his brain may very well raise and superfare a second thought before the first be uttered ; yet, is not the French so hasty in his utterance as he seems to be, for his quicknes or volubility proceeds partly from the concatenation he useth among his syllables, by joyning the first syllable of the following word to the last of the precedent, so that sometimes a whole sentence is made in a manner but one word ; and he who will speak the French roundly and well, must observe this rule.

The French language began first to polish, and to arrive to that delicacy that she is now come unto, in the midst of the reign of Philip de Valois ; Marot did something under Francis the first, (which King was a restorer of learning in generall, as well as a refiner of language) but Ronsard did more under Henry the second.

Since the reign of these Kings, there is little alteration in the context of speech, but only in the choice of words, and softnes of pronunciation proceeding from such wanton spirits that began to miniardize and make the language more dainty or feminine.

But to shew what changes the French hath receiv'd from what it was, I will produce these few instances in verse and prose which I found in some ancient Authors ; the first shall be of a Gentlewoman that translated Esops Fables many hundred yeers since, out of English into French, wherein she concludes

*Au finement de cest Escrit
Qu'en Romans ay tourné, et dit,
Me nommeray par remembrance
Marie ay nom si suis de France
Per l'amour le comte Guillaume
Le plus vaillant de ce Resulme
M'entremis de ce liure faire
Et de l'Anglois en Roman traire ;
Isops appelle l'on cil liure
Qu'on translata, et fit escrire,
De Griu en latin le tourna,
Et li Roy Alvret qui l'ama,
Le translata puis en Angloix,
Et je l'ay tourné en François.*

In the Roman de la Rose

*Quand la bouche toucha la moye,
Ce fut ce dont au cœur j'eus joye.
Sire juge donnez sentence
Pour moy, car la pucelle est moye.*

and elsewhere

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Two of the most approved ancientest Authors in French are Geoffroy de Villardouin, Marshall of Champagne, and Hugues de Bersy, a Monke of Clugny, in the reign of Philip Auguste, above 500 yeeres since, from these I will borrow the two ensuing examples, the first from the Marshall upon a Croisada given for a voyage to the Holy land.

Scachiez que mille cent quatre vingt & dix huit ans apres l'incarnation de nostre Seigneur Iesus Christ, al temps Innocent 3. Apostoille de Rome, et Philippe Roy de France, et Richard Roy d'Angleterre et un saint homme en France qui ot nom Folque de Nuilly, cil Nuillez si est entre Laigny sor Marne, et Paire, et il ere prestre, et tenoit le paroichre de la ville; et cil Folque dont je vom dy, comença a parler de Diex par frances, et par les autres terres, et entre nostre sire fit mains miracles par luy. Scachiez que la renommée de cil saint homme alla tant qu'elle vint a l'Apostoille de Rome Innocent, et l'Apostoille envoya un sien Cardinal Maistre perron de chappes Croisie, et manda par luy le pardon tel comme vous diray. Tout cil qui se croiseront, et feroient le service deu un an en l'ost seroient quistes de tous le pechiez qu'ils auroint faits; perce que cil pardon fuiffy gran si sen esmeuerent multi li cuers des gens, et multi s'en croifierent por ce le pardon ere si gran.

Hugues de Bersy who made the Guiot Bible so much spoken of in France begins thus.

*Don siecle puant et horrible
M'estuet commencet vne Bible;
Per poindre et per aiguillonner,
Et per bons exemples donner
Ce n'ert pas bible lisongere,
Mais fins, et voire, et droituriere,
Mirouer ert a toutes gens.*

If one would compare the English that was spoke 500 yeeres agoe, with the present, he should finde a greater alteration. But to know how much the Modern French differs from the ancient, let him read our common Law, which was held good French in William the Conquerors time. The warres and weddings tother side the Alpes, as I said before, hath caused many Italian words to be naturaliz'd and become free Denisons of France; as contraste strife, accort wise, garbe a fashion, cavalier, centinelle, ambuscade, attaquer, to set upon, Infanterie, camifade, with divers others, which are all Italian words grafted upon French stocks.

I finde ther are some well-sounding single words distus'd in the present French, which seem to be more significant than those that are come in their places; as maratre, paratre, filatre, serourge, a mother in law, a father in law, a sonne or daughter in law, a sister in law; which now they expresse by two words, belle mere, beau pere, belle saur. Besides I finde that some words in French are so abus'd, that they are turn'd to a counterfense; as we use the Dutch word crank in English to be well dispos'd, wheras in the originall it signifieth to be sick: So in French Cocu is taken for one whose wife is loose in the hilts, and made him a passive cuckold; wheras clean contrary Cocu the Cuckow laies her eggs in another birds neast. This word Pleger is also taken to drink after one is drunk unto, wheras the first true use of the word was, that if the party drunk unto was not dispos'd to drink himself, he would depure another to doe it for him, else the party who began would take it ill, which made Charlemain, as the record is yet to be seen, to inhibit his soldiers very strictly to drink one to another; and in the abuse of this word the English also is more faulty. Moreover this word Abry deriv'd from the Latin apricus, is taken in French (as also abrigo in Spanish) for a close place or shelter, whereas in the originall it signifieth an open free sunshine. They tearm in French, a boon companion or merry greek, Roger bon temps, wheras the the originall is, rouge bon temps, serene and reddish fair weather. They use also in France when one hath made a good bargain, to say Il a joue a boule vëue, wheras the originall is bonne vëue. A beaçon or watchtower is cal'd Reffroy, wheras the true word is l'Effroy. A travelling warrant is cal'd Passéport, wheras the true word is Passé par tout. When one is grown hoarse they use to say Il a vu le loup, hee hath seen the wolf, whereas that effect is wrought in one whom the wolf hath seen first, according to Plinie, and the Poet. — Lupi illum videre priores.

There is one kind of saying or proverb which is observable, whereby France doth still acknowledge her self to be indebted to England, which is, when one hath payed all his creditors he useth to say j'ay payé tous mes Anglois, and in this and other phrases Anglois is taken for Creancier a creditor, and I presume it had its foundation from this, that when the French were bound by the Treaty in Bretigny to pay England so much for the ransom of King John then prisoner, the contribution lay so heavy upon them, that for many yeers they could not make up the sum; The occasion might be seconded in Henry the 8th time, at the rendition of Bullen, and upon other treaties, as also in Queen Elizabeth's reign (besides those monies she had disburs'd her self, to put the Crown on Henry the 4th head) which makes me think on a passage that is recorded in Pasquier that happend when the Duke of Anjou under pretence of wooing the Queen came over to England, who being brought to her presence, she told him he had com in a good time to be hostage for the monies that France ow'd her father, and others of her progenitors, wherunto the Duke answered pleasantly, That he was not come only to be hostage, but her close prisoner. There be two other sayings, or proverbs, that though they be obsolet, yet are they worthy the knowledg; the first is Il a perdu ses cheveux, he hath lost his hair, meaning his honour; for in the first race of Kings there was a law call'd la loy de la chevelure, whereby it was lawfull for the noblesse only to wear long hair; and if any of them had committed som foule or ignoble act, they used to be condemn'd to have their hair cut off as a mark of ignominie, and it was as much as if he had been flourdeliz'd, viz. burnt in the back or hand, or branded in his face. The other proverb was, Il a quitté sa ceinture, he hath given up his girdle, which intimated as much as if he had becom banquerout, or had all his estate forfeited. It being the ancient law of France, that when any upon som offence had that penalty of confiscation inflicted upon him, he used before the tribunall of justice to give up his girdle, implying thereby that the girdle held every thing that belong'd to a man's estate, as his budget of money and writings, the keys of his house, his sword, dagger and gloves, &c. I will add hereunto another Proverb which had been quite lost had not our Order of the Garter preserv'd it, which is, Hony soit qui mal y pense, we english it, Ill be to him who thinks ill; though the true sense be, let him be beray'd who thinks any ill, being a metaphor taken from a child that hath berayed his clouts, and in France there's not one in a hundred who understands this word nowadays.

Furthermore, I find in the French language that the same Fate hath attended som words, as usually attend men, among whom we find some use to rise to preferment, others to fall to decay, and an under-value. I will instance in a few; This word Maistre, Master, was a word of high esteem in former times among the French, and applicable to noblemen and others in some high office only, but now 'tis fallen from the Baron to the Boor, from the Count to the Cöbler, or any other mean Artisan, as Maistre Jean le sauvetier, Mr. John the Cöbler, Maistre Jaquet le Cabaretier, Mr. Jammy the Taphouse man. Sire, was also appropriate only to the King, but now adding a name after it, 'tis a title applicable to any meane man upon the endorment of a letter or otherwise. But this word Souverain clean contrary hath rais'd it self to that cumble of greatnes that it is now applied only to the King, whereas in times pass'd the president of any petty Court, any Baliffe or seneshall, was call'd Souverain. Maresshall likewise at first was the name of a Smith, Farrier, or one that dress'd horses, but it clim'd by degrees to that height, that the chiefeft commanders of the gendarmery of France are come to be call'd Marshalls, which about 100 yeares since were but two in all, and now they are 12. This title Majesty hath no great antiquity in France, for it began but in Henry the seconds time; And indeed it was the stile of France at first, as well as any other countries, tutoyer, to show any person one spake unto, but when the Common-wealth of Rome turn'd to an Empire, and so much power came into one mans hand, then in regard he was able to conferre honour and offices, the Courtiers began to magnifie him, and speak to him in the plurall number by you, and to deifie him with transcending titles, as wee read in Symmachus his Epistles to the Emperour Theodosius, and to Valentinian, wherein his stile unto them is Vestra aternitas, vestrum numen, vestra perennitas, vestra clementia, so that you in the plurall number, with other titles and complements, seemes to have its first rise with Monarchy, which descended afterwards by degrees upon particular men.

The French young hath divers dialects, the Picard, that of Iersey and Guernsey, appendixes once to the Duchy of Normandy, the Provensall, the Gascon or speech of Langnedoc, which Scaliger would Etymologize from langue d'ouy, whereas it comes from langue de Got in regard the Goths and Saracens who, by their incursions and long stay in Aquitain, first corrupted the speech of that part of Gallia; The wallon is another dialect who is under the King of Spain; and they of Liege have also a dialect of the French, which among themselves they call Romand to this day; There is another dialect also call'd Franco, which is much used in Greece and Turky, and is one of the chiefest speech of comerce in som parts of the Levant, but it symbolizeth more with the Provensall and Gascon than with the pure French, which is most used in these northwest parts, especially in England, wher besides the main language, ther be so many French words crept in and naturalized among us, that one had need to study French to speak good English. Nor can it be any disparagement for the English thus to admit and enfranchise som forren words, as French and divers Italian for her service, in regard that the language growes every day more copious and rich by this adoption of the choicest and best significant words.

Touching the modern French that is now spoken in the Kings Court, in the Courts of Parliament, and in the Universities of France, ther hath been lately a great competition which was the best; but by the learnedst and most indifferent persons it was adjudgd that the stile of the Kings Court was the smoothest and most elegant, because the other two did smell the one of Pedanterie, the other of wrangling and Chiquanerie: And the late Prince of Conde with the Duke of Orleans that now is, were used to have a Censor in their Houses, that if any of their family spoak any word that favour'd of the Palace or the Schools hee should incur an amercement.

Touching this ensuing Dictionary Master Cotgrave the Collector and Author thereof hath as well deserved in this kind of his Country as ever any did, for it is a most elaborat peece that cost a great quantity of oyl and industry; he hath not onely the simple words as other ordinary dictionaries, but phrases and proverbs upon them, with other observations: This commendation, as it is no flattery to give him, so 'twere an injury to deny him.

The former work is not awbit lessend by this review, only som of those words that are now absolute, and held pedantic, forc'd or affected, are distinguished by this mark † from others that have now the vogue in the refined Court French, which I would not presume to do only of my self without the coadjutorship of a noble and knowing French gentleman.

Ther was never yet any perfect Vocabulary or Nomenclator in any languages; and though this may seem a Paradox to som, I say, ther never was, nor is ther any that can speak a language so exactly, as to call every thing he meets withall by its name; put case the perfectst linguist in the English now living should go aboard a ship, then to a Carpenters shopp or som other artificans, thence go abroad a hawking or hunting, then walk in a botomicall garden, I believe 'tis impossible for him to name all the tacklings of the first, all the toolles of the second, all the terms of the third, and the names of all the flowers, fruits, and herbs he shall find in the last; and if he chance to go thence to any Apothecary shop, 'twill gravell him to name all the drugs and simples he finds there.

The late Cardinall of Richelieu made it part of his glory to advance Learning and the French Language (which may be som recompence for the ocean of bloud hee spilt.) Among other monuments he erected an University where the Sciences should be read in French, for the ease of his contrey men, wherby they might presently fall to the matter, and not spend time to study words only. Hee also had a privat place in Paris call'd L'Academie de beaux Esprits where 40 of the choicest wits of France used to meet every Munday to refine and garble the French language of all pedantic, and old words, as also of som superfluous consonants, and put such another Dictionary to light as Crusca in Italian; ther wanted not som instructions from thence towards this.

To conclude, If those animadversions and supplements which go with this new Edition may conduce to the public good, and to the advantage of those gentle spirits who have a vertuous desire to be vers'd in the refined Court-French now current, I have my wish, I have my reward.

Your most humble servit^r,

JAMES HOWELL.

The French Grammar.

The Proeme.

VV*hat Foundations are to materiall fabriques, the same is Grammar to a language, If the Foundation be not well layed, it will be but a poor tottring superstructure ; If grammaticall grounds go not before, ther is no language can be had in any perfection. The Schoolemen use to compare Logic to the fist, and Rhetoric to the palm of the hand (pugno et palmæ,) in regard the one hath a close pressing form of proceeding, the other a dilated and loose open way of expression; Grammar may be compared to the Feet or supporters, which the other two use to goe upon, and indeed all other Sciences, specially the knowledg of Languages.*

Now, for a Dictionary, which contains the whole bulk of a Language, to go before the Grammar, is to make the Building precede the Basis: Therefore it was held more consentaneous to reason and congruous to order, that the Grammar should be put here in the first place, for Art observes the method of Nature, to make us creep before we go: Moreover the exemplifying words and sentences in French are here English'd all along, for one will come with more facility to pronounce a word aright, when he carrieth the sence of it along with him.

The French Grammar.

Of the French Letters.

Touching the French Abcee, for Alphabet I will not call it according to the vulgar error; that word being peculiar only to the Greek tongue; it is to be observ'd that the English hath two letters, K, and W, more than the French, which consists of 22 only, viz. A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, L, M, N, O, P, Q, R, S, T, V, X, Y, Z.

The Letters may be said to be the prime and simple elements of all Languages; of letters are made syllables, of syllables words, of words sentences, of sentences Books and Volumes. These letters divide themselves into Vowels and Consonants: The Vowels a, e, i, o, u, and y, are the principal ingredients of words, no consonant is pronounceable, or soundable without one of them, therefore tis fit they should have priority of place.

A in the English tongue, and in no other, hath two differing sounds, the one open and cleere, as Balaam, the other pressing and as it were halfe mouth'd and mincingly, as stale ale; In French tis alwaies pronounced as in the first, cleer and over, as l'Amour fait la rage, mais l'Argent le mariage, Love makes rage, but money mariage.

To avoid gaping, which is the worst kind of cacophony in any language, there is sometimes interpos'd and added when a verb ends with a before these small words, Il bee, Elle s'ee, or on which is a note of an impersonal verb in French; as on ne peiera il icy? will my father be here? before il you must put a trenchant wife, as mon pere sera il icy? ma mere viendra elle ausly? will my mother come also? you must pronounce ma mere viendra t'elle ausly? que dira on de vous? what will be spoken of you? you must write que dira t'on de vous? sometimes instead of t, tis put before on the impersonal note, as que fera l'on a moy, si l'on fait ces choses a vous? what will be done to me, if they do these things to you?

E hath two sounds in French, the one full and strong, therefore tis call'd e masculin, and must be pronounc'd as the e's in this Latin word coecere, to compell, with other verbs of the second conjugation, and commonly this e hath a little on the head of it, as degre a degre, pie a madow. The other is call'd e feminin, because tis pronounc'd carelessly and soft, as these e's in credere, to beleve, with such verbs of the third conjugation; or as the e's in this English example, John Donne, Anne Donne, undone; this French Proverb will shew both, Aujourd'huy en terre, demain enterre, to day on earth, to morrow under the earth, in terre, e is feminin, in enterre tis masculin, and hath an acute sound. And as after an enclitichal t' is interpos'd when a verb comes before il, elle, or on, so also when a verb ending with e, comes before any of these small words, a t' is added to make the sound full and stronger, as parle il bon François? doth he speake good French? pronounce parle t'il. desire elle sortir? doth she desire to goe out? pronounce desire t'elle. tire on bon vin icy? do they draw good wine here? pronounce tire t'on, so that among all the rest T hath this privilege, to be pronounc'd when 'tis not written.

All Infinitive moods of the first conjugation, as tirer to draw, parler to speak, have an e masculin before the t; as also all words ending in ier, as Ramener a Cubler, Cordonnier a Shoemaker, with divers other words of trade, & indeed all words ending with er are pronounc'd pointedly as danger, legier light, Berger a Shepherd. E coming before in, or n, is ofentimes pronounc'd like a, as entendement understanding, must be pronounc'd as if it were written antandement, enterrement a buriall, is pronounc'd anterrement. The third person plurall in verbs ending in ent, where the n is drown'd, are excepted; as prient they pray, arrivent they arrive, prient they pray, arrivent they arrive; in these verbs e keeps her genuine sound; as also in words ending in ien, as parle bien ou parle rien, speak well, or speake nothing; as also in these words, musicien, Parisien, Chrestien, mien, tien, sien, a Musician, a Parisian, mine, thine, his; as for example, qui perd le sien, perd le sien, he that loseth his own, loseth his sense, in sien e retains its primitive pronounciation, in sens it degenerates to a, as if it were written sans; but these following words, though i go before en, must be excepted, Experience, patience, science, inconvenience, audience, with these words client esclient (earnest) patient, ingredient, expedient, orient, sient dung, in all these en is pronounc'd like an.

I hath a peculiar sound in the English, which differeth from all other Nations, for all other as well as the French pronounce I like ee, whereas the English pronounce it as if it were a Diphthong compos'd of ei. I at the beginning of a syllable before any other vowel degenerates to a Consonant, and is commonly written long j, as jaloux jealous, jedy thursday, joly dist or pretty, juge a judge; when it comes before ll, 'tis pronounc'd as if it came after them, to make the ll more fluid; as saillir to saile, must be pronounc'd as if it were written saillir, mouillir to wet, as mouillir, fille a maide, as filie; Except these words Ville et village, a town and village, pupille a pupil, eschoile a schayre, caillier to cavill, mille a mile, all which are pronounc'd as they are written.

The Vowell O is not pronounc'd so round and open by the French, as it is by the English; when it comes before m or n, 'tis pronounc'd as if it were double, as pomme an apple, comment how, donner to give, broncher to stumble, are pronounc'd as if they were written poomme, coomment, doonner, brooncher; but those words that are compos'd with the i-repetition pio, and deriv'd from the Latin, are excepted: as prononcer to pronounce, proceder to proceed, &c. Except also such words that have Greek roots, as comete a comet, tome a tome, economie a good house Governer; also dome a townhouse, bonace a calme, demanie a demcon, &c.

V as well as I hath the privilege to become consonant, when it comes immediately before another Vowell, as it useth to have also in the English, as likewise when it comes before r, as sievre a seaver, lectre a Goldsmith, vray true, which makes but one syllable, povre poore. The genuin pronounciation of v in French is as the English pronouncie w in crew, paw, few, or in a whistling tone, as wee pronounce flute, mute, &c. The German and Swed, with others, being a strong winded people, and accustomed to rough collision of Consonants, are subject oftentimes to turne v into t, as forte for vostre yours, talet for valet a boy. And the Germans are also subject to turne b into v, as I heard a tale of a Dutchman in Orleans, who thinking to complement with his Hostesse who had divers children, told her, Par may foy Madame vous avez de veaux enfans, Madame, you have calves to your children, pronouncing veaux calves, for beaux faire.

Y In French though it be a letter, yet sometimes it makes not onely a Syllable, as yver winter, yvre drunken, but also a whole word of it self, viz. an Adverb relating to person and place, as mon frere y est, My brother is there, Dieu vous y aide, God helpe you there, a complement used upon sneezing. Though Y have still the same pronounciation with I the Vowell, yet herein it differs, that Y is constant to it self and never degenerates into a Consonant as I often doth.

Thus much of the Vowells, which may be call'd the ligaments or arteries teries which knit the consonants together. A and O have these privileges above the rest, in that a stand for a substantif, as Il est marqué à l'A, he is a principall honest man, ce monnoy porte l'A, this coine carrieth A, which is the best kind of coine bearing upon it the Parisian mark; O sometimes passeth for avec, as vien a moy, come with me, je dormiray o vous, I will sleep with you: but this is used among the vulgar sort.

The French Grammer.

Of Diphthongs, or compounded Vowels.

Diphthongs are made meetly of Vowels, and the French tongue hath many of them, and some triphthongs, which are pronounc'd commonly as they are written, except these three, ai, ay, au; Ai is pronounc'd like an é masculin if a consonant follow it, as clair clere, faim faim, faim hunger, are pronounc'd as clér, sém, sém; and so is ay likewise, but if a vowel immediately follow, then they are pronounc'd as they are written, as rayon a sun beame, playe a wound, crayonner to paint roughly.

Moreover, in the first persons singular of the preterperfect tenses ai and ay are pronounc'd as written, as je parlay I spake, juray I swore, &c. pais a country, hayr to hate, nait naturall, are not diphthongs but stretch'd to dissillables, as pa-is, ha-yr, na-if, which makes a mighty difference 'twixt paix peace, and pais a country, the first being pronounc'd pè, the other as before say'd pa-is. The diphthong au is prolated like a full o, as hautain highminded, is pronounc'd as hoten, chevaux horses, as cheuue, chaud hot, as chode. The diphthong oi and oy are to be pronounc'd extensively as oe, as sans Roy, sans loy, without King, without law, pronounce them Roe, loe.

The diphthong ou is pronounc'd like oo, as ou allez vous? whether go you? must be pronounc'd so aller vous; a la goute le Medecin ne voit goute; the goute makes a Physitian blind, pronounce as if it were goote.

So much of the Vowells (with their diphthongs) which are the same to a language as the five senses are to the body, in point of necessity; without these the body is but an unwieldy carcasse, without the vowels the whole bulke of consonants is a soundlesse thing.

The Spaniards use to vaunt, that their language hath a word that contains in it all the five vowels, which no other language can say of it selfe; it is Oueja a sheep, Jehova hath also all the vowels.

Of Consonants.

The French is a hungry language, for it devours more consonants than any other, which makes his speaking & writing to differ so much as doth his singing and writing: I will not say his words and actions differ so much, though he be full of complement.

Heretofore in the French Orthography they were more letters written then now they are, and I helieve the reason was to shew the Originall and Etymology of their language from the latin, but now they begin to omit them more and more as superfluous, though in Province and Languedoc they be all pronounc'd and written. The reason why the French ore hips so many consonants is, to make the speech more easie & fluent, as vous me ferez croire que vestrez font lanternes, you will make me believe that bladders are lanterns: In this saying these letters which have pricks under them are all omitted. Now the most generall rule of consonants is, that if the word following begin with a consonant, and the precedent word end with one, that at the end is commonly cut off, to enchain as it were the words together, and make the pronounciation more smooth and round; and this concatenation of words makes the Frenchman seem to speak faster than he doth. Among others let this example serve, to shew how much the pen differs from the tongue, Il fait beau temps, 'tis faire weather, which is pronounc'd lie bo tan, where halfe the letters are drown'd. cest à l'hault goust, 'tis the highest tast, pronounce it cèl bo goo. Nor is the English behind with the French in such contractions; as muskidditi, Godigodin, for much good may it doe unto you, God give you good evening.

Among Consonants some are call'd liquids, as l, m, n, r, and they are seldom cut off, as mon Dieu, mon Roy, my God, my King, cœur content, a contented heart; here n and r keeps her full sound; besides, c at the end of words keeps his sound, as allez avec Dieu, go with God, avec moy, with me, and sometimes this c in avec is wantonly turn'd to que, as avecque toy, avecque vous; f and g also at the end of words are not cut off, as le bon bœuf d'Angleterre, the good beeste of England, le joug de Christ est léger, christ's yoke is easie.

B is pronounc'd as in English, and is alwayes cut off at the end of words, as palomb a ringdove, plomb lead, are pronounc'd palom, plomb.

C before e, i, y, sounds like f, as cecine Marteleus beef, cipricimi quickly; as also when it hath a taile, us ça, ça, courage, on, on, courage; ch is pronounc'd also like sh, as Charles Shales, cheual a horse, shetval, except some proper names, as Chanaan, and these g. Cholere choler, Chorde a chord, Eschole a schoole, Cichorée juccory.

C before t is also cut off, as du dict au fait il y a vn gran trait, there's a huge distance 'twixt the word and the deed; in which saying every c is cut off; c in second is pronounc'd like g.

P preceding another consonant is seldom pronounc'd, save onely in these admettre to admit, admirer to wonder, administrer to administer, adverbé an adverb, adversaire an adversary, with their derivatives, adresser to direct, Advent Advent, adroit fit and handsome; when a word ends with d, and the next begins with a vowel or h, the d is pronounc'd like t, as lourd abus a grosse abuse; ga-land homme a gallant man, vent au vilage rend vn homme sage, wind in the visage makes a man sage, in all these words the d is pronounc'd like t.

E in French is pronounc'd as in English, and at the ends of words it retains still its full sound, as devez apres vn œuf comm' apres vn bœuf, drink after meege, as after an oxe.

G before e, i, y, hath a gentler and softer sound in French than in English, and is pronounc'd almost like an z, as genereux generous, giron the lappe, gyrouet a fane, in these g hath a melting soft pronounciation like z; when gn comes together the g is quite cut off, and the word is pronounc'd as if an i followed the n; as mignon a neat person, is pronounc'd minion; A la trogne cognoit-on l'yrogne, by ones snouts one knowes a drunken lout, we must say tro-nie, yronie.

H is omitted in words that come from the Latin, as honeste honesty, huile oyle, heure an houre, honneur honour, but in naturall French words, h retains its aspiration, as hanter to haunt, haste hast, hardy stout, &c.

L coming before a single consonant is to be pronounc'd, alceffe bigmes, multitude, revolve, except fils a soune, if it come before two consonants 'tis cut off, as tiltre a tile, aultre another, &c.

In the end of these words, fol a foole, mol sèsi, col a neck, 'tis pronounc'd like u, as fou, mou, cou.

M doth often degenerate into n, as nom a name, renom renown, fain hunger, temps time, Come an Earl, in all these words the m is turn'd to n.

N is never pronounc'd in the third person plurall of verbs be they of what conjugation soever, as dancent they dance, parlent they speak, n is here eaten up.

P pronounc'd every where as in English.

Q retains its sound at the end of words, as il saute du coq a l'asne, he leaps from the cock to the asse, a proverb us'd against them that digresse from their matter: que, qui, qua, and quo, are pronounc'd like ke, ki, ka and ko, as quarenta sortie, quiter to leave, question question, quotizer to taxe.

R Some out of a lazie and soft feminine humor do leave off z at the end of words, as s'il vous toulez dormi chez nous vous me ferez gran plaisir, if you will sleep with us you will do me a great pleasure, but 'tis better pronounc'd than omitted.

S in words derived of the latin in flo, lis, sus, fris, is alwayes to be pronounc'd, as persister, contester, triste, illustre, except in prester to lend, where 'tis cut off yet in prestation it keeps its sound; as also in vestiaire a vestry, though it be cut off in vestir to cloath, and in escarlatin, though it be cut off in Escarlote scarlet; and in Apostolique, though it be cut off in Apostre; it keeps its sound also in all proper names, as Auguste Augustin, except Escosse Scotland, Estienne Stephen, Hierosme Hierome, Crepin, in all these s is lost. S keeps its sounds in all words that signifie the fashion of a people, as a la Morelque, after the Moors manner; a la Turquesque, after the Turkes manner; a la Greguesque, a la Barbarelque, after the Greeke and Barbary manner; as also in names of Sects, as Anabaptiste, Atheiste, Alchoraniste, Mahometiste, Sophiste; and lastly, in these ensuing words, most whereof have the latin for their Originall, which are rank'd according to the order of the letters.

T as in English before ion is pronounced like c, as devotion, contention, and in the conjunction et, is never pronounced, though the next begin with a vowel, as Moy et Antoine et Eustace le moine soupçons ensemble. I and Anthony and Enlace the Fryer do sup together.

X is pronounced in French as in English, but in these and all other numerall words tis pronounced like z, deux two; dixième the second, dix ten, dixième the tenth, six six, sixième the sixth, yet in soixante sixty, tis pronounced like s. In the ends of words x is pronounced like z, as paix peace, prix price, are pronounced paiz, priz, and as in this saying, aux faux jaloux deux yeux crevez, of him who is causelessly jealous pull out both his eyes; in all these words x is pronounced like z, yet in this word perplex' d, x keeps her sound, and in vexer to vex.

X hath this singularity above all other his fellows, to have the sound of two consonants, viz. c s, which being so, an illfavour'd Anagram might be made of vxor a wife, for orcus hell were a true Anagram to it. — Vxor et Orcus idem.

Z is pronounced as in English, as Il ne vaut pas vn zelt, he is not worth the film of a kernell. It is to be observ'd that when z concludes a word, it makes the precedent vowel grave and long, as chantez sing ye, dancez dance ye, and so all second persons plural of verbs, celuy qui est adonné aux dez, le diable le tire par le nez, he who is given to dice, the devill leads him by the nose. Observe that a doib very frequently degenerat into z, but z not into s.

Thus much of the originall and simple materials of the French language, viz of the letters, of their pronunciation, and of the cutting off of consonants, but let it be specially observ'd, that where a Consonant is cut off, the precedent vowel must be pronounced with more gravity and longer, as mastin a mastif, wher the s is cut off, is pronounced longer than a in matin the morning, as also e in tesse the head, than e in tete a dudge.

This small crooked Character ^z, (which I have not read observ'd by any Grammarian) hath been in former times much used in the French Orthography, it useth to be put at the beginning of a word, and then it stands for con, as tout vā a ^ztrepoil for contrepoil, all goes clean ham. Then it useth to be put at the end of a word, and stands for no, as Domin^z De^z me^z, for Dominus Deus meus, like this Greek character ^z which stands for omicron and figma, as ^z for ^z for ^z.

Of a Nowne.

Nouns are commonly joyned with Articles. { Le the, and vn a, are for the masculine. } Plur. les, the.
 { La and vne for the feminine. }

The French, as also the Italian and Spanish, with all other vulgar languages, have certaine prepositive articles which they put before their Nouns, which the Latine hath not, and they are le, and vn; they correspond with our the and a in English; and they goe before Substantives, and Adjectives, as Le gran Turc, the gran Turk; these articles are most necessary to be known in all their cases, as followeth, and there are more errors committed by their misapplication, than by any other way.

The declining of Nounes is made by Prepositions, the Accusative case being alwaies like the Nominative, and the Ablative like the Genitive.

These Articles serve	In the singular number to the	Genitive	De le before a vowel, as de l'immortel.
		Cafe	Du before a consonant, as du roy.
		Dative	A le before a vowel, as à l'immortel.
		Cafe	Au before a consonant, as au roy.
	In the plural number to the	Genitive	Des, as des hommes, of men.
		Dative	Aux, as aux hommes, to men, or to the men.
		Dative	A les as à les femmes, to the women.
		Dative	A des as à des femmes, to some women.
		Ablative	Aux, as aux champs, in the fields.
		Ablative	Des, as des cieulx, from the heavens.
		Ablative	Es, as es deserts, in the wildernesses.

Declining of Nounes.

Masc.		Masc.
Nom. vn, or le roy, a, or the King.		Nom. les roys, the Kings.
Sing.	Gen. d'un, or du roy.	Plur.	Gen. des roys.
	Dat. à vn, or au roy.		Dat. aux roys.
	Accus. vn, or le roy.		Accus. les roys.
	Vocat. ô roy, or ô le roy.		Vocat. ô roys.
	Ablat. à vn roy, or du roy.		Ablat. des roys.
Femin.		Femin.
Nom. vne, or la femme.		Nom. les femmes.
Sing.	Gen. d'une, or de la femme.	Plur.	Gen. des femmes.
	Dat. à vne, or à la femme.		Dat. aux femmes.
	Accus. vne, or la femme.		Accus. les femmes.
	Vocat. ô femme.		Vocat. ô femmes.
	Ablat. d'une, or de la femme.		Ablat. des femmes.

Forming The Plurall number is formed from the Singular, by putting to s or z, as roy roys, lettré lettrez; except words that end in s, x, or z, whose Singular and Plurall are one; as le pais, and les pais, le faix, and les faix; le filz, and les filz. A Country, a burden, a son.

Words ending in l, change l into ux; as cheval, chevaux; le pais, and les pais, le faix, and les faix; le filz, and les filz. A Country, a burden, a son.

The French Grammar.

Genders of nouns
Substan-tives.

veux; mal, maux; metal, métaux; Except these irregulars, ciel, cieux; celui, ceux; ail, yeux; vieil, vieux; genouil, genoux.

Words ending in a consonant in the Plural lose the sound of their consonant; Grec, Grecs; as if it were Gres; except they end in a liquide; as bal, bals; nun, nouns; don, dons; jour, jours.

1 Nouns are all of the Masculine gender, except 1. the names of women, and offices to them belonging; as mere, nourrice; names of fruits; as vne poire; of cities; as Clermont, Marseille.

2 Substantives in e Masculine, as bonté; except blé, congé, clergé; and such as come from Latine words in atus; as Duché, Comté, marché.

3 Substantives in e Feminine, as grace; Except words coming from Masculines and Nouns in Latine, as pere, livre, titre; office, sacrifice. But these are Feminines, lexiue, réponse; image, rage, table, table.

4 Substantives in eur, as douceur; except pleur, labeur, heur, with his compounds, bonheur, malheur.

5 Nouns in on, as affection, prison, chanson; except horizon, tilon; and words ending in llon, as poisson.

6 Substantives in u, vertu, tribu; except festu.

7 Nouns in ix, as pain, voix, noix; pois, for pitch; except prix.

8 These are also Feminines, mercy, loy, peau, soif, cief, nef, salin, mois, nonnain, putain, fin, taçon, leçon, mer, rous, tour for a tower, otherwise not; brebis, perdrix, iument, forêt, dent, part, hart, mort, cour.

Observe that there is no Newter gender in the French tongue, but the masculine stands instead of it; when an Adjective is used for a Substantive, it hath always le before it, as le long du bord de la rivière, along the banks of the river; le peu de soin quel vous avez de moy, the small care you have of me; le vous rendray le double, I will returne you double, &c.

Some words are of the Masculine and Feminine gender, but then they change their sense, as le page is a page, la page the side of a leaf; le manche is a handle, la manche a sleeve; le tour a turn, la tour a tower; le voyle a veyle, la voyle a sail; le coche a coach, la coche a sow, as voyla vne coche dans vn coche, behold a sow in a coach; le haste a spear, la haste hast; le Satyre a wood God, la Satyre an invective. Le poille a canopy, la poille a frying-pan; le periode the end or declining, la periode the end of a sentence; le livre a book, la livre a pound; le temple a church, la temple the temple of the head; le trompette a trompeter, la trompette a trumpet; enlègne an Ensign-bearer, mase, enseigne an Ensign, fem.

Of Adjectives.

Gender.
of nouns
adjectives

Adjectives form the feminine gender, by putting to e feminine, as hault, haulte, high, caché, cachée, bid, except it end in e feminine, for then it is common to both genders, as homme or femme honorable, l'eau trouble, troubled water.

Exception.

1 Adjectives in e, turne e into éh, as sec, dry, sèche, except Grec, Grecque, Duc, Duchesse, Clerc, Clergesse.

2 Words in eau change eau into elle, as beau faire, belle puceau a maide, pucelle, nouveau new, nouvel-le.

3 Words in eux make the feminine in euse, as piteux, piteuse, Roux red, makeh rowse, faulx false, faulse, doux sweet, douce, traits fresh, fraîche.

4 Words in t change t into v, as brief short, brève, restit ty'd, restive, pensit thoughtfull, pensive.

5 Words in eur make the feminine in eule, as flatteur, flatule, menteur a lyer, menteuse, iureur a swearer, iureule, pecheur a sinner, makeh pecheresse.

6 These double their consonant bas low, basse, bon good, bonne, net neat, nette, quel, quelle, tel, tell, bel, belle. Note also, that bel is put before a vowel as bel homme, beau before a consonant, as beau garçon, a handsome boy. So nouveau is put before the Substantive, as le nouveau Testament, feminine nouvelle: but neut, and the feminine neuve, after the Substantive, as In College neuf.

Touching the comparative and superlative degrees of Adjectives, in French they are expressed by plus more, and tres, placing them both before the positive, as plus sage more wise, tres sage most wise, plus vaillant more valiant, tres vaillant most valiant. But these following are excepted, bon good, meilleur better, mauvais bad, pire worse, petit little, moindre less; as also these Adverbs, bien well, mieux better, mal ill, pis worse, peu a little, moins less, beaucoup much, d'avantage more, par trop a great deal too much.

There be some Superlatifs form'd according to the Latine, as serenissime most gracious, grandissime most mighty, reverendissime most reverend, illustrissime most excellent, doctissime most learned, but they must be always pronounc'd long, with the emphasis upon the last syllable saving one. There is another kind of phrase us'd in French after the comparative, which some hold not to be so elegant, as la France est plus fertile que non pas l'Espagne, France is more fertile than Spain; Vous avez mieux parlé maintenant, que vous ne fistes pas hier, you have spoke better now, than you did yesterday. Bien also and fort are put before Adjectives to make them superlatifs, as Je suis vostre bien affectionné serviteur, or vostre fort affectionné, I am your affectionate servant.

Among all other nations the English put the Adjective before the Substantif, which no other use to do; yet in French there be some Adjectives that are better before than behind, as bon good, beau faire, brave brave, as qui a bon voisin a bon matin, He that hath a good neighbour hath a good morrow; beau chevalier a handsome knight, brave capitaine a brave captain; as also all Adjectives which imply honour or dishonour, as c'est vn vaillant soldat, he is a valiant soldier, c'est vn honneste gentilhomme, he is an honest gentleman, &c. but there be some Adjectives which are never put before, as pain blanc white bread, pain bis brown bread, vin clair et claret wine, vin rouge red wine; lastly there be divers Adjectives that may be placed indifferently before or behind.

Of a Pronoun.

I, tu, il, ilz, are put when the Verbe is expressed; Je, je chante I sing, tu jouës thou playest, il frappe he strikes, ilz ont. But moy, toy, luy, eux, are put when the verbe is not expressed; as qui ha fait cecy? who hath done this? answer moy, not je; toy, not tu. So, Qui ha fait cela? answer luy or eux; not il or ilz, je is thus declined.

Nom. Je or moy I.
Gen. de moy.
Dat. à moy or me.
Accus. moy or me.
Ablat. de moy.

Plur:

Nom. nous we.
Gen. de nous.
Dat. à nous.
Accus. nous.
Ablat. de nous

So decline tu thou. plur. vous you.
and soy in both numbers.
Nominat. is wanting.
Gen. de soy.
Dat. à soy, &c.

Nom.

The French Grammar.

Nom. il or luy, bee.
Gen. de luy.
Dat. à luy and luy.
Accus. le and luy.
Ablat. de luy.

Nom. ilz, eulx, ou leur, they.
Gen. d'eulx, de leur.
Dat. à eux, leur, leurs.
Accus. ilz, eulx; les.
Ablat. d'eux, leurs.

Luy. Luy is common to both genders, and signifieth to him, or her, as mamere m'a demandé, & je luy ay respondu, My mother asked for me, and I answered her. Leur likewise signifieth to them in both genders, as je leur ay baillé, I gave it them, both men and women. But leur with an article is a Noun possessive; as le leur, theirs. Eux is sometimes put for soy the reciprocal, as ilz ont tous biens communs entre eux, for entre soy, they have all goods common betwixt them.

Ce, Cest. Ce and Cest this, plur. ces. Ce before a Consonant, as ce garçon. Cest before a vowel, as Cest homme.

Celuy. Celuy that man, cestuy this man, iceluy the same man, plur. ceux and iceux, femin. celle and icelle, are thus placed in the sentence: Celuy goeth before qui, and iceluy repeateth it as its relative, as celuy qui sème mauval'se semence, iceluy recueille mauvais grain, He that soweth ill seed, that man gathereth ill grain.

Mesme. Mesme is joynd to Nouns and Pronouns, and is as much as self in English, or met in Latin, like ego, ipsemet; as l'homme mesme, the self same man; moy mesme, my self; luy mesme, himself.

Mon, ton, son. These Possessives, mon, ton, son, noz, voz, are put when the Substantive is expressed; as mon livre, my book, noz livres, our books. But mien, tien, sien, nostres, vostres, are put without the Substantive, having alwaies an Article joynd with them; as, d qui est ce livre whose book is this? we may either say, il est à moy, or else, c'est le mien, it is mine, les nostres. Noz amis, et les vostres, our friends and yours.

Of a Verb.

As there can be no syllable without a Vowel, no word without a syllable, no sentence without words; so neither words nor sentences can have sense at least a-Ils auront. They shall have.

ny perfect sense without a Verb, which may be said to animat both, and this part of speech swayerth most of any in the languages of men.

The first is Active, when the effect or product of the action signified by the Verb, passeth from the Agent to the Patient, which the Latins call transitive Verbs, as Nature fait l'vuide, Nature abhors a vacuum; je craindray Dieu, I will feare God.

The second is Reciprocall or reflected, when that which is meant by the Verb is not trans- fer'd to an other thing or person, but glanceth backe upon the Agent himselfe, as Je me plais à la cavallerie, I love horsemanship; Il se delecte à apprendre François, He delights to learn French. This Verb hath sometimes the sense of a Verb Passive.

The third sort is Newter, which must have the help of an auxiliarie Verb; and herein doth not much differ from the reciprocal.

There are two Verbs to whom all the rest are beholden, therefore are they call'd Auxiliaries, they are Avoir to have, and Estre to be: Avoir deserves to have the van, because he helps to conjugate also his fellow auxiliarie Verb Estre, and himself also in divers tenses; the difference twixt these two is, that the first is an Active Auxiliarie, the other a Passive: whosoever is conversant of the French Language, one of his prime tasks must be to have these two verbs exactly by heart.

Besides

The French Grammar.

Besides the former divisions of Verbs, they admit of a subdivision into Regular and Irregular. Of Regular verbs there are, as in Latin, four conjugations which are to be distinguish'd, though some do it otherwise, according to the order of the letters; the first terminat in er, as abandonner to forsake; the second in ir, as punir to punish; the third in re with an o before, as Croire to believe; the fourth in re with some consonant before, as craindre to fear: These four examples following, in parler to speak, bâtir to build, voir to see, connoître to know, may serve for all others to conform themselves unto.

The first Conjugation is of verbs that end in er, as parler to speak.

Concerning the forming of the Tenses. The Imperfect of the Indicative is formed from the first person plural of the Present, changing ons into oy, as chantons, je chantoy. The first and second persons plural in the Present of the Optative, and in the Imperfect of all Moods, interpose i, in all conjugations, as Aimeions, aimeissions, ameroions.

The second of the Imperative, is from the first of the Indicative of all Conjugations, as Di tu tell thou, reçois tu receive thou, &c. The third from the third plural of the same tense, by taking away nt, as ils donnent, qu'il donne, &c. Some be irregular, as qu'il face, qu'il sache, from font, and sçavent.

The Present of the Optative, from the third of the Imperative evermore. The Imperfect from the second singular of the Aorist, tu leus, je leusse.

The Imperfect of the Subjunctive from the Future of the Indicative, by changing ay in oy, as j'yameray, j'aymeroy.

The Participle Present from the first plural of the present of the indicative, changing ons into ant, as batissons, batisstant.

A Verb Passive.

A Verb Passive is made by putting the Participle of any Verb to the persons of the Verb je suis, as je suis, tu es, il est aimé, nous sommes, vous êtes, ils sont aimez. Imperfect, j'estoye aimé, nous estions aimez, &c.

Note also, that the third persons in both numbers are passively to be rendred, when se is set before them, as il se fait it is done, ilz se font they are made.

A Verb Impersonall.

1 Active is made by putting il before the third person, as il convient tis fit, il convenoit, il faut it must, il falloir, il fallust, il ha fallu, il faudra, &c. Such are these il neige it snoweth, il gresle it hails, il gele it freezeeth, il rele it thaweth, il averspit it waxeth night, il pleut it raineth.

2 Passive is made by putting on, or lon before the third persons singular of Verbs Actives, as on dit, dicitur, it is said, or men say, on aime, amatur, men love, on aimoit, on aimast, &c.

Here tis to be noted that Il cannot be put before all Verbs whatsoever, but on and l'on may; except some few which will have only Il for their usher, as il faut it must, il chaut tis caw'd for, il reste it remains, il convient tis fit, these cannot indure on or lon.

The French Grammar.

The Anomala or irregular Verbs of the first Conjugation.

Aller, to go.

OF the first Conjugation there is only one auxiliary Verb, Aller, to go. Present tense. Je vay or je vois, tu vas, il va, nous allons, vous allez, ils vont. Imperf. J'allois, tu allois, &c. Aorist. J'allay, tu allas, &c. Preterit. Je suis allé, tu es allé, Plusquam Perfect. J'estoye allé, &c. Futur. J'iray, tu iras, il ira, nous irons, vous irez, ils iront. Imperat. Va tu. Qu'il aille, or qu'il voise, allons, allez, qu'ils aillent, or qu'ils voisent. Optat. Pres. C'est mon. It is true; or, yea indeed; as much as Of affirming, vraye.

The French Grammar:

vrayement. Sometimes it is an Interrogative, as est-il en Grèce; as alçavoir mon s'il le feroit. To wit whether he would doe it yea or no. Voire. Ted.

Ouyyes, si so tis, ouy dā yes forsooth, voirement yea, c'est mon,

Of denying.

Non, non dā no forsooth, nullement by no means.

If a Negation go before, si is commonly us'd with a Verb adjoin'd, as vous ne mangiez pas you ate not, si say yes but I do; vous songez vous dream, non say no but I do not.

Moreover when we assent to any thing spoken of, we use si as affirmative, vous estes François you are a Frenchman, si suis je yes I am.

The French is full of double Negations, or words implying double Negations, as je ne vous vis jamais, verbatim tis, I saw you not never, je n'ay rien caché I have not hid nothing; which makes strangers that use simple Negations to commit errors often, by omitting the Negative Adverb ne, as j'ay rien caché, j'ay rien appris, instead of je n'ay, &c.

Ne and ni nor, are used indifferently, as je ne trouve ni rime ni raison en vostre dire, or ne rime ne raison, I finde neither rime nor reason in your speech; nul and personne are taken often indifferently for no body.

Nani, or nenny, or Nanin. No.

Hola, or hau. To which they commonly answer.

Of calling.

Plaisit il? what is your pleasure?

Of wishing.

Pleust à Dieu, or à la mienne volonté. I would to God.

Of exhorting.

Avant, Forward, forward. Sus, or sus. Go to. Lala. There there.

Of numbering.

Fois, which is alwaies added to some Nouns of number, une fois once, or one time; deux fois twice; tant de fois, so many times.

Of gentleness.

Bellement softly, tout beau gently, doucement, tout doux.

Of haste.

Promptement, viste, viftement, quickly.

Of protecting.

Assurement, de vray, pour vray, lusma vie on my life, en bonne foy in good faith.

Of contrariety.

Au rebours, au contraire, a contrepoil, a l'opposite, clean ham, clean contrary.

Of chance.

D'avanture, de cas fortuit, par hazard, par fortune.

Of quantity.

Beaucoup, moult Much. Prou, from the Latine word Probe, signifieth much; as when they say, Vir probè doctus; a man very learned. Bon prou leur face. Much good may it doe them. And in this sense they use bien and fort; as the Latines have their valdè from validè. Homme bien sçavant, or fort docte, A man very learned. Note that moult and prou, are now out of use.

Conjunctions.

Copulatives.

ET, which never soundeth e neither before Consonant, or Vowell. Ainsy que, even as. C'est à sçavoir, namely; or, that is to wit, that is to say.

Conditionals

Davantage. Moreover. Si, If. Sinon que But that, or except that. Pendant que, or tandis que Whiles that. Pourveu que Provided that.

Discretives, or Adversatives.

Combien que, or jacoir que, Albeit that. Ains, or ainçois. Teavaiber. Toutesfois Notwithstanding. Neantmoins. Nevertelless. These which Rasmus makes Discretives, Stephanus will have to be Adversatives.

Disjunctives.

Ou, either; when it is put without an accent; but when it is accented, it is, saith Serreius, an Adverbe of place; as où est il? where is he?

Dont. whereupon. Doncq, or Doncques Then, Illatives or therefore. Partant wherefore. Rationals.

Car. For, from the Greek γαρ. Parce que, or pour Cause. Car. For as much as. Atinque, entant que, d'autant que, pource because, parquoy whereby.

Prepositions.

À Pres, after. Arriere, behind. Chez, at; as chez nous, at our house. Chez eux, at their house. Deçà, on this side. Delà, on that side, or beyond. Dessus, upon. Dessous, under. Vers, or envers, towards. Jusques, until. Selon, according to, &c.

Syntaxis of Nounes.

Adjectives, especially those that signifie colour, are put after their Substantives, as vin blanc, white wine, vin clair, claret wine, pain bis, brown bread. Thefeare set before the Substantives, bon, beau, belle; nouveau, nouvelle; mauvais, petit; as petit homme, mauvaise femme.

The Adjective agreeth with his Substantive in Gender; as mon pere my father, ma mere my mother. Yet if the Substantive begin with a vovell, they put an Adjective Masculine before it, as mon espée my sword, mon hostelle: Except m'amie, or if the word begin with h, when it is sounded with aspiration, as ma hauteur my height.

When two Substantives come together, the later is put in the Genitive case, L'argent du Prince est sujet à la pince, the Prince his money is subject to the pincer. Sometimes one of the Substantives is taken away by Elipsis, as à la Saint Jean, la Toussaints, where the word Feste is understood.

Adjectives of desiring, or plenty or carefulnesse, and their contraries governe a genitive case, as riche d'argent rich in money, nonchalant de son prouffit carelessse of his profit.

Comparatives governe a Genitive case, as la face n'est plus grande de demy pied, the face is no bigger then halfe a foot. Sometimes que serveth to the Comparative, as plus blanc que neige whiter then snow.

Of Verbs.

The Infinitive with an Article becometh a Noun Substantive, le boire estaint la soif drinking stancheth thirst, le boisson drink.

When two Verbs come together, the later is the Infinitive Mood, as je veux aimer I will love. Sometime the principall Verb is understood, as le mastins de courir, & nous d'aller apres. i. commencerent, & nous commençâmes.

The Nominative case goeth before the Verb. Except the question be asked, as iray je? shall I go? as-tu? hast thou?

The Accusative followeth the Verb, j'aime mon maistre: except me, te, se, le, luy, leur, nous, vous; as tu te prises thou dost value thy selfe, il se tourmente he torments himselfe, je luy diray I will tell him, je leur escriray I will write to them: except it be the Imperative Mood, as battézle. Moy, toy, soy, are also put after the Imperative Mood, as well for the Dative as the Accusative, as di-moy tell me, leve-toy rise up.

Me, te, se, are put before the Particle en, especially before Verbs Neuters, signifying moving to a place, as je m'en vay, va t'en, fui t'en, ilz s'en sont alléz. Sometimes a Verb hath two Pronounes before it, as vous vous corroutez fort, you anger your self much, one the Nominative, the other the Accusative case; or else the Verb is placed between them, as Comme vous portez vous? Sometimes there are three, as vous vous en irez vous?

Some Verbs being construed with an Infinitive Mood, cause it to be rendred Passively, as je vous feray battre, I will make you be beaten; faites faire chemin, cause roome to be made; je le vei mettre en prison, I saw him put in prison.

The

The French Grammar.

The Verb aller is elegantly construed with a Participle, as il s'en alloit disant; il disoit; il s'en va mourant; il meurt, he is a dying.

A Participle added to je suis, to make a Preterperfect tense, may vary both Gender and Number, as je suis venu; elle est venue; nous sommes venus. But being added to j'ay, it changeth not its termination, as j'ay disné, elle ha disné, nous avons disné. Teas if a Substantive go before the Nominative case and the Verb, the Participle following is rendred Passively, and agreeth in Gender and Number with that Substantive, as les graces que Dieu nous ha données; les corps que la mer ha engloutis, the blessings which God hath given us, the bodies which the sea hath swallowed.

Of Adverbs.

NE the Negative is alwayes accompanied with point, or pas; as il n'y est point, or pas, he is not there at all. And without either of these words it is equivalent to an affirmative, il est plus sçavant que ne font ses compagnons, he is more learned then are his fellows.

Dont is a Participle of Relation, and signifieth as much as de que, de quoy, du quel, desquels; as j'ay le livre dont vous parlez, I have the booke of which you speak.

Of Prepositions.

1 Standing between two Substantives, maketh the later an Adjective, as homme à cheval, a horse-man; homme à pied, a foot man; escuelle à oreillons, a Porrenger, or a dish with eares.

2 Standing before a Denominative, it signifieth as much as after the fashion, as à la Francoise, after the French fashion; à la Tolesque, after the Dutch fashion. So en is used, as vivre en beste, to live after the manner of a beast; traité en Prince, intainted like a Prince; Parler en Roy, to speak like a King.

The Preposition à.

3 Is put after an Adjective signifying aptnesse, or nimblenesse, as vite à l'escuyer, nimble at the ball.

This Preposition à expresseth also the final cause for which a thing was made, as pot à vin a wine pot, vn estuy à peignes a comb-case, Terre à froment a wheat country. The difference twixt aux and es is this; es signifieth in the, viz. any thing one within another; aux signifieth any externall application; and is more generall.

1 Standing before a Substantive, it signifieth either matter, as bague d'or, a gold ring; or the instrument, as batre de verges, to beat with rods; jouer de l'espinette, to play on the Virginals.

2 It is put after Adjectives signifying dexterity, as habile de la plume, skillfull at his pen; habile du pied, active, or swift of foot.

3 Standing before the Infinitive Mood, it is Englished to, as je vous prie de faire cela, I beseech you to do that.

4 Du standing before a Substantive signifieth part of any thing, and is Englished some, as du pain, some bread; des poissons, some fishes.

The Prepositions de & du.

De being to both Genders, is us'd in indefinit phrases, as autorité de Roy, the authority of a King; Telle est misere d'homme, such is mans misery, poissons de mer; And hereby the want of Adjectives is supplied in French, in which point that tongue is very penurious. Though Monsieur Madame, Mademoiselle, admit none but indefinite articles, which is to be imputed to the Pronouns mon and ma; yet these phrases are excepted; vous faites du monsieur, you play the monsieur; voilà vne frippone qui tranche de la dame, See how that baggage pranks it like a Lady.

Force taken for quantity endures no preposition after it, vous avez force ducats, you have abundance of crowns; j'ay force travaux, I have good store of troubles; de is put also sometimes before the Adverb bien well, and becomes an Adjective, as homme de bien, an honest man, tres-homme de bien a most honest man.

Devant is construed with que before an Infinitive, as Devant qu'aller, before we go. Après with the Preterperfect tense of the Infinitive mood, as après avoir receu vos lettres, after the receiving of your letters.

Aupres, Arriere, à l'entour, govern a Genitive case, as aupres du feu, neer the fire, arriere de nous, behind us; à l'entour de soy, round about himself.

STrangers are subject to commit errors oftentimes, in putting pout for, instead of de of, after some sort of words, as je vous remercie pour la courtoisie, I thank you for the courtesie, whereas they should say de la courtoisie: So they use to say commonly, pour combien vendez vous ce cheval? For how much do you sell this horse? but this is neither good Latin nor good French, for acheter to buy, vendre to sell, loer to hire or let, marchander to trade, estimer and priser to value, &c. will have the thing, and the price of it in the Accusative case, without any preposition; as j'ay acheté ce cheval dix escus, I have bought this horse for ten crownes, Et je l'ay revendu à quinze, and I sold him again for fifteen. There is also another peculiar phrase of speaking in French, as combien faites vous ces gands, what sell you these gloves for; and so all other sorts of commodities: yet avoirt to have, and bailler or donner to give, admit of pour or a, as j'ay acheté ce chapeau à six escus, or pour six escus, I have bought this hat for six crownes; j'ay baillé vint escus pour ce cheval, I have given twenty crownes for this horse.

De is very frequently us'd in French for avec with, as Il en tuera dix de la chandelle, & quinze du chandelier, he will slay ten with the candle, and fifteen with the candlestick, a Proverb of a braggadochian; or Il est fourni d'entendement comme vn oysen de creste, He is furnish'd with understanding as a goose is with a crest. This observation is of great consequence to him who will speak good French.

Of French Interjections.

OF encouragement, ça ça there there, courage, pousse boutte put on, hai auant beigh, on there, Avant on, on, su, sus up.
Of sorrow and wearinesse, ah, eh, ha, las, he las, alas, oime.
Of admiration, aga, dà hé dà, strange very strange.
Of calling, he, hau, hau là haula hé chouse hor, ho there.
Of scorn or aversion, as sy, pouach out, soh.
Of sight or indignation, bran, foin, bahou, vah, brique, a. i. in your teeth, a straw for you, away away.
Of driving away, gare ware, hai de là away thence, hors de là out thence, devant on away.
Of silence, st, paix, cheut, mor, hush not a word.
Of joy, gay, aligrement, dehais, beighday, merry.
Of stopping, holà, prou.

Of En and Y, Pas and Point.

One of the greatest criticisms and difficultest thing in the French Language, is to make right use of these small Particles y and En, pas and point, therefore I have reserved them for the conclusion; and I shall in some measure endeavour to help the learner.

Y, is a Relative Particle coming near to the nature of the Dative, and en, to the Ablative case, both of them have sometimes locall, sometimes reall references; when y, relates to a place it commonly implies a going or removing thither, as vâ a l'église, go to church, j'y iray tantot I will go thither presently. Y denotes sometimes an abiding in a place, as Le Roy est-il a Londres? Is the King in London? Il y est, He is there, or Il n'y est pas, he is not there. Sometimes y signifies passing by a place, as l'y passeray, I will pass that way: When y refers to a precedent thing, it signifies an applying ones self unto it or minding of it, as prend garde a mon cheval, look to my horse, bien t'y prendra garde, well, I will look to him; Vous parlerez bien tost bon François car vous y employez en bon efficient, you will quickly speak good French, for you ply it in good earnest.

En, before a Verb is a Relatif, before other parts of speech tis a Preposition; it refers also both to place and things like y, when it refers to a place it denotes commonly a going out, therefore it hath a similitude with the Ablative case, as Viens tu du palais dost thou come from the palace? ouy, j'en vien, yes, I come thence. When en hath no certain antecedent, it signifies moving to a place, as je m'en vay, I am going away. When en hath reference to a thing it denotes some interest in it, as Nous jouons a la boule en voulez vous estre? we are playing at Bowles will you make one?

En refers also to quantity, as Pretez-moy de l'argent si vous en avez, lend me some money if you have any; J'en ay a vostre service, I have some at your service; combien avez vous de laquays, how many footmen have you? J'en ay trop, I have too many. En hath reference also to the efficient cause of things, as Il est si amoureux de Marguerite qu'il en perd le sens, He is so farre in love with Marger that he growes mad after her. En, refers also to materiall causes, as Je ramasse beaucoup de livres pour en faire une Bibliothèque, I gather many books to make ther- of a Library.

Y and en are sometimes us'd together, if a certain Antecedent be expressed before the Verb, as l'ay esté a Londres & j'en m'y en re- tourne, I have bin in London, and I return thither; Il s'en charge a la Cour & il s'y en va, He hath an Office at Court, and he goes thither.

The greatest difference I find twixt these two little particles is, that y requires an Antecedent alwaies to be expressed before: En needs it not sometimes, as je m'en dors, I am falling asleep; beside the one, as I said before, hath similitude with the Dative, the other with the Ablative case; both of them cause an apostrophe in the precedent word if it end with a vowel. En is of a larger extent then y, for it signifies sometimes like or as, as parler en Philosophie, to speak like a Philosopher, Marcher en capitain, to walk like a Captain.

Pas and point which are so frequently us'd in the French tongue, and so promiscuously serve only to make the negation fuller. Point is us'd when we speak of things having quantity, as Je n'ay point d'enfans, point de ducatz, I have no children, no crownes; point also differs from pas, because it serves sometimes to make an absolute answer of it self which pas cannot do, as avez vous d'argens? have you any money? point, none at all; pas doth more aptly conclude a simple negation, or a negation of quality or place, as Il n'y est pas he is not there.

In conditionall sentences we seldom use point or pas, as S'il vous n'estiez mon frere ie ne vous aimeroys tant, If you were not my brother, I would not love you so much. Besides we use not point and pas in sayings of advice and of taking heed, as gardez vous que le fargeant ne vous attrappe, Take heed the Sergeant oreake you not.

Observe if there be any other word that makes the negation fuller, point, and pas are not us'd, such as rien nothing, jamais never, nul none, nullement not at all, onc or onceques ever, aucun any, quelconque whatsoever; as je ne vous doy rien, I owe you nothing, je ne vous vis jamais, I never saw you, &c. Moreover when we use savoir for pouvoir to be able, or oser to dare, daigner to vouchsafe; as je ne scaurois faire cela, I am not able to do that; je n'oserois entreprendre telle chose, I dare not undertake such a thing.

So much of these Monosyllables and petite enforcing Particles, which keep such a stirre in the French Language, insomuch that I may compare them to the fly upon the coach wheele in dry weather, the stau- tingly said, Fob, what a deale of dust do I raise?

A Dialogue twixt Sylvander and Cloriman, consisting of some extraordinary and difficult criticall Phrases which are meer Gallicismes, and pure Idiomes of the French tounge.

Sylvandre.

O que je suis bien aise de vous voir: en si bon point,

Cloriman.

Je vous sçay bon gré, mais, qu'est-ce que de moy, que vous en faires tant d'estat?

Sylvandre.

Vous estes de mes amis les plus signalez & je m'aime fort en vostre compagne, & cela pour de bonnes raisons.

Cloriman.

Cela procede seulement de vostre bonne opinion en mon endroit, mais assurez vous que vous me trouverez tousiours prest pour vous rendre le reciproque.

Sylvandre.

Je vous baise les mains, mais, où est-ce que vous tirez a'steuré.

Cloriman.

Je vay faire vn tour de pourmenade, pour ne desennuyer.

Sylvandre.

I'iray quand & vous, y a il quelqu'un au jardin?

Cloriman.

Personne, je m'y trouveray tout a'steure.

Sylvandre.

Tout beau, qu'apprenez vous de nouvelles de vos parens aux champs.

Cloriman.

On m'a escrit que mon frere a passé le pas, & qu'il mourut en vray Chrestien.

Sylvandre.

Las, que c'est peu de chose de nous quand il plait a Dieu, las que nous sommes miserables; mais son trespas me tache pour nous avoir quitté en la fleur de son aage.

Cloriman.

Pour le mesme sujet j'en ay beaucoup de regret, & pour d'autres raisons.

O How glad am I to see you well.

I thank you kindly, but what am I that you should esteem mee so much?

You are one of my most speciall friends, and I delight much in your compaignie, and that for good reason.

That proceeds meerly from your good opinion of mee; but assure your self that you shall find me alwayes ready to requite you with the like.

I kisse your hands, but whither are you going now?

I go to walk a turn to recreate my self.

I'll go along with you, is ther any body in the garden?

Not any body, I'll be there presently.

Go soft, what newes have you from your friends in the Countrey?

They have writ to me that my brother is dead, and that hee died a true Chistian.

Helas, what poor things are we when it pleaseth God, belas how miserable are we? but his death troubleth me, because he left us in the flower of his youth.

For the same cause I am also much aggriev'd, and for other reasons.

Syl.

The Dialogue.

Sylvandre.

Si j'étois que de vous j'iroie quand & quand pour consoler, madame votre mere, car il y va de votre devoir.

Cloriman.

Si ferai je, Il y va aussi de mon interst, car on m'a dit qu'elle s'en va mourant de tristesse.

Sylvandre.

Hastez vous y donc, et en votre absence s'il y a chose pour petite qu'elle soit qui vous puisse importer, de grace, servez vous de moy.

Cloriman.

J'avois depuis peu vn procez, mais graces a Dieu j'y ay reussy, de sorte que je n'ay gueres a faire a Paris.

Sylvandre.

Vous estes, plus heureux que je ne suis, car j'y ay vn procez de plus de trois ans ? Si est ce que le Juge au gros ventre ne le veut pas vuider.

Cloriman.

Il faut que vous ayez patience, tout vient a point qui peut attendre.

Sylvandre.

Vous parlez en philosophe, me sauriez vous dire le quantieme de ce mois avons nous aujourd'hui.

Cloriman.

C'est le huitieme de Septembre, & environ la Saint Michel j'espere estre de retour, mais voy lá venir Philippe, dont je suis bien aise.

Sylvandre.

C'est mon: & bien, d'ou venez vous ? s'il vous plaist, d'ou vient il que y Paris vous a manqué si long tems ?

Philippe.

Je vien de faire le tour de toute la France.

Sylvandre.

Ma foy, il faut que vous ayez force ducats de faire si long voyage, il faut que vous ayez bien dequoy.

Philippe.

Quoy que je n'aye gueres vaillant, si estce que je n'eusse pas voulu pour trois fois autant que j'ay espendu, que je n'eusse pas fait ce voyage. j'ay veu tant de choses remarquables.

Sylvandre.

Et bien qu'est ce que vous avez veu de plus signalé ?

Philippe.

Vrayement c'est vn beau país que la France, ce seroit vn discours infiny de vous dire tout, mais entre autres choses j'ay veu toutes les plus belles villes du Roy aume, & j'ay observe qu'elles sont toutes posées sur des grandes & navigables rivières ; comme les villes de Rouën & Paris sont situées sur la Seine,

Were I as you, I would presently go to comfort the gentlewoman your mother, for your duty calls you to it.

So I will, and my interest lies also therein, for I am told that she is likewise a dying of griefe.

Hast thou then, and in your absence if there be any thing, be it never so little, that may concern you, I pray make use of me.

I had lately a suit in law, but thanks be to God I brought it to a good end, so that I have little to do now in Paris.

You are more happy then, for I have a suit three years old and more, yet the Judge with the great belly will not make an end of it.

You must have patience, all comes right to him that hath patience.

You speak like a Philosopher, can you tell me what day of the month this is.

'Tis the eight of September, and about Michaelmas I hope to be return'd, but there comes Philip for which I am very glad.

'Tis he ; well, whence come you Sir, may it please you ? what's the reason you have been so long absent from Paris ?

I come from travayling all France.

Faith, you must have crowns enough to make such long journeyes, you must have good meanes.

Although I am not very rich, yet I would not for thrice as much as I spent but I had made this journey, I have seen so many remarkable things.

well, and what have you seen most remarkable ?

Truly France is a brave Countrey, it were an infinit discours to tell you all, but among other things I saw all the fairest townes of France, and I have observ'd that they are situated upon great and navigable Rivers ; as the Townes of Rouen and Paris are placed upon the River Seine, those of Bourdeaux and celles de Bourdeaux & Tholouſe ſur la Garonne, celle de Lion, avec d'autres, ſur deux rivières c'eſt à ſavoir la Rhone & la Saulne, celles d'Amiens & Abbeville ſur la Some, celles d'Orleans, Blois, Tours, Saumur & Nantes ſur la Loire. J'ay veu auſſy tous les Cours de Parlements, comme Troyes en Champagne, Dijon en Burgogne, Aix en Provence, Grenoble en Dauphiné. Rennes en Bretagne, Bourdeaux en Gaſcogne, Rouen en Normandie, & Paris pour l'Iſle de France, pour la Picardie, & tous le pays juſques a Lion.

The Dialogue.

Sylvandre.

Vraiment c'eſt bien voyagé, mais où eſſez que vous vous acheminez maintenant ?

Philippe.

Je vay a la Cour, pour rendre mes devoirs au Roy mon maître, eſt il long temps que vous l'avez veu ?

Sylvandre.

Il n'ya gueres, & je vous aſſeure c'eſt le plus adroit Prince, & le plus puiffant pour ſon aage que la France a eu jamais.

Philippe.

Mouſieur, voicy l'heure qui m'appelle au depart, c'eſt pourquoy je m'en vay prendre congé de vous.

Sylvandre.

Monſieur, Je vous remercie bien fort, & vous ſupplie d'une choſe, c'eſt que nous nous puiſſions revoir deux Jours d'icy.

Philippe.

Monſieur, toutes & quantes fois qu'il vous plaira me faire tant de bien.

Sylvandre.

Puis que vous y allez, obligez moy de preſenter mes baiſemains a tous nos amis a la Cour.

Philippe.

Si feray-je, ne paſſez pas donc plus outre, car vous eſtes trop ceremonieux, & vous ſavez que la loy ceremonielle eſt abrogée long tems y á.

Sylvandre.

Monſieur, pour moy j'amerois mieux eſtre trop ceremonieux, que trop prophane ; Adieu, en vous remerciant.

Tholouſe upon the Garonne, that of Lion, with others, upon two rivers (whereof the one is ſlow the other ſwift) the Rhone and the Saulne, thoſe of Amiens and Abbeville upon the Some, thoſe of Orleans, Blois, Tours, Saumur, Nantes and a multitude of others upon the Loire.

I have ſeen likewise all the Courts of Parliament, as Troyes in Champny, Dijon in Burgundy, Aix in Provence, Grenoble in Dauphine, Rennes in Britany, Bourdeaux in Gaſcony, Rouen in Normandy, and Paris for the Iſle of France, Picardy, and all the Countrey as farre as Lions.

Truly you have travelld well, but whither are you bound now ?

I go to Court to do my duty to the King my maſter, is it long ſince you ſaw him?

'Tis but lately, and I aſſure you he is the properſt Prince, and the goodlieſt of his age that ever France had.

Sir, you ſee the time bids me depart, therefore I will take my leave of you.

Sir, I very much thank you, and deſire one thing of you, that wee may ſee one another again two dayes hence.

Sir, as often as you ſhall pleaſe to do me ſo much favour.

Since you are going thither, I pray preſent my ſervice to all our friends at Court.

I ſhall do it, go no further then, for you are too ceremonious, and you know that the ceremoniall law is abrogated long ſince.

Sir, for my part, I had rather be too ceremonious, than too prophane ; farewell, I thank you.

Obſerve, That in ſo ſhort a Dialog, which relates meerly to ſome peculiar phraſes, and modes of ſpeaking that are proper only to the French language, and not rendible verbatim, in any other, ther[could not have been expected ſuch choice and ſubſtantiall matter as might have been couch'd in a looſe and free Diſcourſe.

Obſerve

Observe that one of the main tasks of the late Academy of wits in Paris, is to retrench the superfluous letters, whereof the French Language is fuller than any other; as will appear in this following example.

L'Apôtre Saint Paul en ses Epîtres nous avertit, que le droit chemin pour parfaitement connoître notre Souverain seigneur est de nous accoutumer à bien faire, & d'écouter la très-sainte Ecriture, qui nous rend témoignage de luy, et de fréquenter l'Eglise son épouse, la quelle nous fera paroître les émerveillables effets de l'amour qu'il nous montre chaque moment; Elle nous éclairira aussi en la connoissance de notre Redempteur, et nous fera dédaigner le monde avec un vray dégoût, et mépriser nous mêmes et les esbats de ceste vie, avec un grand déplaisir et mécontentement, et nous fera appréter pour le temps de notre trépas, en nous remplissant de doux soupirs. Les esprits subtils et déliés qui aiment plutôt l'école de la nature, peut être, ne se soucieront gueres de cet' avis, qui touche l'estat de leur âmes auquel il n'y a rien d'égal, &c.

According to the refined French you write thus.

L'Apôtre St. Paul en ses Epîtres nous avertit que le droit chemin pour parfaitement connoître notre Souverain seigr. est de nous accoutumer à bien faire, et d'écouter la très-sainte Ecriture qui nous rend témoignage de luy, et de fréquenter l'Eglise son Epouse, la quelle nous fera paroître les émerveillables effets de l'amour qu'il nous montre chaque moment; Elle nous éclairira aussi en la connoissance de notre Redempteur, et nous fera dédaigner le monde avec un vray dégoût, et mépriser nous mêmes et les esbats de ceste vie avec un grand déplaisir et mécontentement, nous faisant appréter pour le tems de notre trépas en nous remplissant de doux soupirs. Les esprits subtils et déliés qui aiment plutôt l'école de la nature, peut être, ne se soucieront gueres de cet' avis, qui touche l'estat de leur âmes, auquel il n'y a rien d'égal, &c.

Englished thus.

The Apostle Saint Paul in his Epistles, doth advertise us that the right way to know perfectly our Sovereign Lord is to accustom our selves to do well, and to hear the holy Scripture which gives testimony of him, and to frequent the Church his Sponse, who will make appear unto us the marvellous effects of the love he shewes us every moment; she will also enlighten us in the knowledge of our Redeemer, and make us disdain the world with a true distast, and despise our selves, and the sports of this life with a great displeasure and discontentment, and make us prepare our selves for the time of our death, by filling us with sweet sighings. The subtil and nimble spirits that love rather the school of Nature, will not peradventure care much for this counsell, that concerns the state of their souls, which nothing can equall, &c.

In the second French example, you may observe by collating it with the first, sundry Consonants cut off, which the late Refiners of the French Language do allow of; as also any other letter that is us'd to be written and not pronounc'd, especially if the word be derived from the Latin, may be omitted, according to the rules of the Modern Orthography.

Thus have you the Rudiments and chief fundamentals of the French Tongue, which may fit you for the following Dictionary, and afterwards as you make a further progresse in the Language, you may consult longer Grammars whereof there are divers, among whom I hold Maupus to be the exactest and most Schollar like, where you shall find things illustrated, and exemplified more at large; yet there are no precepts so punctuall, but much must be left to Observation, which is the gran Mistressse that guides and improves the understanding in the referch and poursuite of all humane knowledg.

Quod deficit in præcepto, suppleat Observatio.

To

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

and my very good Lord and Master, Sir William Cecil

Knight, Lord Burghley, and sonne and heire apparent unto the Earle of Exceter.

Here present unto your Lordships view an Account of the expence of many houres, which in your service, and to mine own benefit might have been otherwise imployed : for sloth, howsoever, had not consumed them ; somewhat I must have done the whilest ; nor could I have bestowed them on a work of lesse use for your Lordship, the French being already so well understood by you, and all yours. In which regard, as I am particularly bound to acknowledge your Lordships goodnesse, bearing with my humor to follow, and allowing me time to finish, it ; so have all they, to whom it shall prove of any worth, just cause to honour in your Lordship that goodnesse, continued a long time unto their, and the common good. No privat consideration was fit to make your Lordship often to dispence with thordinary attendance of an ordinary servant. But this is one of the least of your Lordships respects to the Public ; and I would be loath to ingage your Judgement, or Honour, on the successe of so mean a Peece. My desires have aimed at more substantiall marks ; but mine eyes failed them, and forced me to spend out much of their vigour on this Bundle of words ; which though it may be unworthy of your Lordships great patience, and perhaps ill sorted to the expectation of others, yet is it the best I can at this time make it, and were, how perfect soever, no more then due to your Lordship, to whom I owe, for what I have been many yeers, whatsoever I am now, or look to be hereafter.

Your Lordships

most bounden servant

Randle Cotgrave.

Au favorable Lecteur François.

Lecteur, l'Auteur de ce livre (Gentilhomme Anglois, à qui son propre Pays &, sur tout, le nostre ont vne obligation particuliere, qu'ilz ont à peu d'autres) apres avoir peniblement veillé & travaillé par plusieurs ans, sur cet œuvre, non moins, certes, ingrat que laborieux; En fin est contraint de le laisser partir de ses mains, plutot vaincu de l'importunité de ses Amis, & de la necessité que le public en a, que satisfait en son ame de son propre ouvrage. Et t'assure que si on l'eut voulu croire, il fût encore apres à se tourmenter, pour trouver la signification de telz mots, qui, possible, ne seront jamais plus ouyz en ce monde, (quoy que luz) & dont, je croy, il n'y a personne qui ait ouy parler depuis cent ans, que luy; tant sa curiosité a esté grande & exacte à lire toute sorte de livres, vieuz & nouveaux, & de tous noz dialectes. A cette cause, peur, possible, qu'ayant égard à ce que tu voys, non à ce que tu ne voys pas, tu l'accuses plutot de ce qu'il a dit, que de ce qu'il a esté contraint de laisser; qui toutefois seroit vn tresor inestimable, s'il eût pu trouver, ou pardeça, ou en France mesmes (où il a esté si curien d'envoyer expres) qui l'eut pu, ou voulu refoudre de ses doutes; Il te supplie bien fort, si tu trouves icy quelques mots qui te sonnent mal aux oreilles, ou mesme qui n'y ayent encore jamais sonné, de croire, qu'ilz ne sont point de son invention, mais recueilliz de la multitude & diversité de noz Auteurs, que possible tu n'auras pas encore luz, & qui, tant bons que mauvais, desirent tous d'estre entenduz. Il pouvoit bien citer le nom, le livre, la page, & le passage; mais ce n'eut plus icy esté vn Dictionnaire, ains vn Labyrinthe. Ceuz qui ne les sauront, pas, les apprendront; Ceuz qui les sauront, jugeront bien que l'ignorance, possible, d'un seul mot, soit substancial, metaforique, inusité, ou tiré de la variété des Arts, peut souvent obscurcir tout vn sens, & rendre barbares les conceptions les plus gentilles. Permis à qui voudra d'en vser, ou de les laisser; Bien entendu, toutefois, que ce ne seroit pas le pis qui nous pût arriver, que de remettre suz, certains mots sur-annez, que nous avons mieuz aimé laisser perdre, quoy que tres propres & significatifs; Et autres de notre propre cru, bien que de divers terroir, allans plutot mandier chez les Etrangers pour nous exprimer, ou bien nous taisans du tour, ou parlans par vn long contournement de paroles, que d'ouvrir vn peu la bouche pour en prononcer quelques vns qui sembloient trop revefches pour la douceur du palais de noz Damoiselles, ou grater l'oreille delicate de Messieurs noz Courtisans de ce tems-cy. Quant aux fautes de l'Impression, l'Auteur ne les peut totalement prendre sur soy, ne niant pas qu'il n'en soit eschapé assez, comme aussi possible en quelques endroits, quelque impropre interpretation; esperant bien toutefois, que les vnes ny les autres ne seront pas si grandes que ta courtoisie n'y puisse bien suppleer. A tant, Il recomande son œuvre à ta bonne reception, & moy je demeure,

Ton tresaffectionné Patriote,

A DICTIONNARIE

OF THE French & English Tongues,

Newly Refin'd and Amplifi'd.

The first Letter of all Alphabets, is (as it is a Letter) a Substantive: whence,

Il est Marqué à l'A: he is a right honest man: or, one in whom there is as much virtue, as great worth, as can be in any man: (From the money of France; every sort whereof hath stamped on it a particular letter, denoting the place where-in it was made; now that which is coined in Paris hath on it an A, and is, commonly, of the best mettall.)

A. The third person singular of the verbe Avoir, signifies (of it self) Hath, holdeth, possesseth, enjoyeth, as, Allez a qui bon credit a: also (when it hath the locall Adverb y before it) Is, as, Allez y a si trop n'y a: But when it precedes a Participle in the preterpof. Et l'ense of another verbe, it is restrained unto the first signification, Hath; as, il a gagné ce qu'il a peu: In all which (and otherwise, only as it is a Letter) it is written without Accent.

A. an Article, set before a proper Name, or Noun, signifies, in matters of possession, of, as, La maison à Pierre, La femme à Robert: But where the verbe Estre goes before, it signifies To, or, Unto; as, La maison est à Pierre, belongs to Peter: So doth it also when it follows verbs that require a Dative case; as, Je l'ay donné à toy, cela appartient à moy; or, that signifie notion to a place; as, Je m'en iray à Londres, à ma métairie.

A. an Article, or Preposition; significeth sometimes, As, or For; Il est tenu à perdu; à set; à fable: sometimes only, For; à cette cause; sometimes, As, as, Tu ne trouveras à Paris; à loisir; à vostre commandement: Also In, or At; as, à temps, & lieu; sometimes In, or Before; as, à la presence du Roy; sometimes By; as, à l'aventure; à cœur; à droit; à tort: & (as in old Authors) à dieu le veu, instead of par dieu ie le veux; sometimes, On, or Upon; as, à lundi, il monte à cheval: sometimes To; as, à propos; à point: also, Agreeable, or According to; as, à l'ordonnance des Arbres: also, Like unto; After the manner, or fashion of; as, vestu à l'Italienne, une espèce à l'Espagnole: sometimes, with; as, à peu de perte; à bannière déployée: une chaire à accouvoirs; & (in Blasons) Il porte de Synople à trois Lyons d'argent: also, with, or, Among; as, à nous tel fait est bien vilain; Il est à nous grande vinée. A la mienne volonté, If I might have my will: or, I would to God.

Dont il est à grande joye, whereof he is very glad; which makes him very merry. Ils se faisoient tenir à douze; They made themselves be held by twelve: or, were so fierce that twelve were faine to hold them.

A. preceding the Infinitive moode of a verbe, signifies, To, serving to, for to, of purpose for; as, S'il a chose à dire; vn clou à pendre des sacs. Sometimes it either gives the verbe a principall sence, as, Il est à dormir, he is sleeping, or new, or neere asleep; or, the verb being present, it denotes the future; as, I'ay cela à faire, I am to doe that hereafter.

A. before an Adjective, sometimes makes it admit of an Adverbiall interpretation; as, à droit, à tort; rightfully, wrongfully.

A. is sometimes not expressed, but understood, as, Si Dieu plaist, for, s'il plaist à Dieu.

† Aachée: f. a doleful cry, lamentation. Ay-mee. Aage; m. age, yeares, daies; also, an age; time, season.

De grand aage; very old, a grandfire, a gray-beard, whose some foot is already in the grave.

De petit aage; very young, a child, an infant, an innocent, an underling.

Avoir de l' aage; to be strong and lusty: also to be well in yeaves, or well swicken in years.

Aagé: m. aagé; f. aged, old; of age, of years; of full age, of great yeares.

became both Officers, and Vassals; yet were they neither but at the will of their Sovereigne, or, at most, not longer then during their owne lives; But within a while they found means to make their Fiefs hereditary; and afterwards procured their governments to be annexed unto their Fiefs; and at length (taking advantage of the misfortune, weaknesse, or facility of their Princes) increached on the Sovereignty of them both: (In all which time the Earles of Provinces were no whit inferiour unto Dukes; having as large dominions as they, and Earles of townes under them as well as they; besides that, the Governours of divers Provinces (as Normandy, Britaine, and others) were as often called Earles, as Dukes.) Being at this height, and thereupon growing emulators, and sometimes th' enemies, of Kings, they on the other side took a course, at first by the Parliament, (settled at Paris) to abridge part of the royalties; and afterwards by Escheats, Confiscations, or marriages, to re-write unto the Crowne the whole estates, of as many of them, (whether Earles, or Dukes) as yet acknowledged any dependency on them by Homage, or otherwise; (The rest, either at first (as Lorraine, and Savoy) having usurped an absolute Sovereignty; or since by mischances (as Burgundy, and Flanders, by the imprisonment of Francis the first) being alienated from the Crowne;) And creating other Earles, have granted them only a jurisdiction, or sovereignty (if so they will have it) that's wholly controllable by the Parliaments, and subject unto themselves.
